Completion of the UA Museum of the North addition is critical to the university's operations. The UA Museum is charged with housing rare and unique series of specimens representing all aspects of regional natural history. Such series, often accumulated over decades, are a crucial resource for research and advanced study. Completion of the museum hinges upon funding for unfunded construction work within the facility. A one year delay in construction of the facility has caused additional cost to the project. Funding will complete the $42 million expansion.
