Project Description/Justification:

This master plan will investigate options for a public airport in Whittier, Alaska. It will concentrate on the most feasible alternatives that came out of phase I of the study in 2003. The existing Whittier Airport is on leased Alaska Railroad Corporation lands, is only 1,480 x 58 feet long, and is in generally poor condition. The airport is completely non-standard and operations are generally only possible in one direction. It is important to have an emergency landing strip in Whittier for times when weather closes the pass and aircraft are forced to land. Whittier is a popular recreational destination and receives use by recreational and local pilots. Providing a safe airport/landing area for this community, with its limited access to the highway system, is an important community goal.
