Key RDU Challenges

Protecting the Safety and Physical and Financial Well-being of Alaskans

- Increased Crime. In FY 2010 the division filed 6,280 felony charges as well as 19,888 misdemeanor cases statewide. This is a 9% increase in felonies compared to CY 2009 and a .06% reduction in misdemeanors.
- Prosecutor Caseload. The large caseload each prosecutor carries is a statewide challenge. In FY 2010 the average caseload per attorney of cases accepted for prosecution was 344 cases. During FY 2010, the Anchorage office accepted 7,385 cases for prosecution. That is an average of 211 cases per assistant district attorney; however Anchorage is different than the other offices in that the caseload was 46% felony cases. Felonies are more complicated and time consuming to prosecute. During the same period, Fairbanks accepted 6,056 cases, an average of 433 cases per attorney. In Fairbanks 82% of the cases were misdemeanors, which is more typical of the other offices throughout the state. The Palmer office accepted 4,564 cases for prosecution, which is an average of 326 cases per attorney, and Kenai accepted a total of 3,393 cases for prosecution, an average of 377 cases per assistant district attorney. These are the four largest offices in the division. In Barrow and Kotzebue – two single-attorney offices – the caseload was well over 700. However, in both these communities the Department is adding an additional attorney which will have the caseload.
- Steady Focus on DVSA Implementation. Implementing the Governor's ten-year plan to combat domestic violence and sexual assault (DVSA) will likely increase the number of crimes of this nature which are reported to law enforcement, resulting in greater demand for prosecution and child protection efforts. Anomaly of higher rates in the aftermath of the Governor's initiative is something for which we need to be prepared.

- Address dramatic increase time to disposition of felony trial cases. The average elapsed time to disposition for felony trial cases throughout the state is too long. For example, in Anchorage the elapsed time to disposition had nearly quadrupled – from 173 days to 669 days – between 1987 and 2007. The number of cases pending after the year in which it was screened is increasing. This is caused in part by the increasing delay in the time it takes to get matters to trial.
- Staffing. The number of prosecutors statewide is fewer than the number of judicial officers and defense attorneys. On average, prosecutors are outnumbered 1.2 to 1 by judges and magistrates. At times prosecutors cannot cover all the courts in session at one time. For example, Juneau has three prosecutors appearing before two superior court judges, two district court judges and a part time master. There are four attorneys in the Public Defender's Office, the Office of Public Advocacy contract attorneys are a firm of three lawyers and there are numerous private defense attorneys. In the two District Attorney offices that had only one attorney, there is a superior court judge and a magistrate in each community; a two to one ratio. The Department is increasing to two attorneys in one of these offices. The Department's long-term goal is to have parity with judicial officers and public defenders in all communities.
- Salaries. The Department of Law employs some of the most talented attorneys in the state, but below-market salaries pose a challenge to maintaining this high level of performance. Some of the Department's most experienced attorneys will be eligible for retirement in the near future. The Department has implemented a comprehensive recruiting strategy with the active involvement of the Attorney General. However, ensuring that departmental salaries are competitive with salaries from the private sector will be essential to recruiting and retaining the best attorneys. Attorneys are paid according to the current statutorily mandated pay scale used for all partially exempt positions. We believe a comprehensive solution needs to be found to lessen the salary gap between the Department of Law and other public and private-sector attorney positions.
- Technology. The Criminal Division's case management system, Case Records Information Management and Exchange System (CRIMES), was implemented twelve years ago. It is in the process of being upgraded. The case management system has reached a critical point as both the software and hardware have become seriously out of date. Although some hardware has been replaced, staff turnover, delays and performance shortfall in the software have caused problems.

The training covered various topics including domestic violence, trauma and mental health, access to Justice for DVSA Victims; working with interpreters and an overview of batterer intervention. Funding was provided by a grant the division received from the U.S. Department of Justice, which has now expired.

The training was presented by distinguished members of the National College of District Attorneys with a theme centering around domestic violence and sexual assault cases. The focus of the training was on case preparation and effective communication skills with different types of witnesses. The cases used were Alaska cases. Funding was provided by a grant the division received from the U.S. Department of Justice, which has now expired.
- Security Updates. The division completed the process of installing key card access for the Anchorage and Fairbanks offices in order to provide better security of the prosecutors and staff. In Barrow a security wall was built to protect employees. The Department is in the process of commencing a statewide audit of all its facilities for security issues.
